

IRISH KNIGHT TAKEN PRISONER

Sir Roger Casement Captured While Trying to Land Arms in Ireland From a German Ship.

By Telegram to The Freeman. London, April 25.—It is expected that Sir Roger Casement, who was taken a prisoner on the night of April 20-21 while trying to land arms upon the Irish coast, will be tried for treason.

The whereabouts of Sir Roger are unknown but it is presumed that he is a captive in the Tower of London. The fact that the Irish knight had been captured while taking part in a filibustering expedition did not become known until an official statement was issued last night.

Among the prisoners taken were a number of German sailors on board the German auxiliary on which Sir Roger and the arms were being carried. The German auxiliary, which was sailing under the guise of a neutral freighter, was sunk but the German submarine which was conveying it is understood to have escaped.

The German ship attempted to run through the lines of the British patrol fleet, but was detected and her mission immediately became known.

London newspapers this morning urge a punishment in proportion to his crime.

The efforts of Sir Roger and his German conspirators to start a rebellion in Ireland have been without result, according to competent authorities.

The arrest of Sir Roger puts at an end pro-German activities which he has been carrying on since shortly after the outbreak of the war. He was in the United States when the conflict broke out and at that time gave no hint of the propaganda which he was to carry on so strenuously during the next year and a half.

Making his way to Germany by way of Sweden Sir Roger at once enlisted his activities on the side of the Germans, centering his efforts upon an attempt to stir up the Irish against England.

In Germany Sir Roger tried to get Irish prisoners of war to enlist in the German army as a price of their freedom, but his efforts were fruitless.

This, however, was only part of his mission. Then he issued an open letter to the ambassadors and ministers of the warring powers declaring that he had evidence of a conspiracy between M. de C. P. F. J. and Sir Roger's arrest, Christensen, being promised $5,000 for his share in the plot.

The next heard of Sir Roger was a report that he had applied for German citizenship. Meanwhile anti-British articles were appearing in German papers under the signature of the Irish nobleman.

It was said that a reward of $25,000 had been placed upon Sir Roger's head by the British government.

Before the war Sir Roger gained prominence for the part he played in the suppression of Belgian atrocities in the Congo and the investigation of cruelties inflicted upon natives in the rubber fields of South Africa.

At that time he was called one of the world's greatest apostles of humanity; today British newspapers bitterly scorn him as "the Benedict Arnold of England."

CONFERENCE MAY FURTHER ENTANGLE

By Telegram to The Freeman.

El Paso, Tex., April 25.—The conference between Major General Scott and General Alvaro Obregon, which will be held on the border during the next ten days, may add further complications to the already tangled relations between the United States and Mexico. Predictions to this effect were made today by men of standing who have seen fit to abandon their interests in the interior of Mexico and seek safety on the northern bank of the Rio Grande.

They declared that Obregon would come to the border to represent only the Obregonista faction, which has superseded the Carranzistas in power. In their reports on conditions in Mexico they hinted that Obregon, in the course of his negotiations with General Scott, would insist that he be recognized as the one man capable of restoring peace in Mexico, making this demand as a condition under which he would be ready to render aid in the task of eliminating Francisco Villa.

However much truth there may be in the stories brought out of Mexico army officers admitted today that General Scott was confronting a most difficult task in his conference with Obregon. The latter has issued orders to the Mexican generals in northern Mexico that any further advance by the American troops must be opposed. To Obregon's influence is attributed the refusal of the de facto government to let the United States expedition use the Mexican railways. He even refused to let General Pershing use the telegraph lines for his reports to General Funston.

Until the conference takes place there will be no extended movement by the American troops. The work of "redispersion" and "recuperation" for the expedition is well under way. Large supplies of clothing have reached the concentration points from Columbus. This brought a welcome relief to Uncle Sam's soldiers, many of whom were almost in rags.

The first task of concentrating the troops where they could dig themselves in and prepare for protection in case of a great Mexican upheaval was the withdrawal of hundreds of soldiers from the most advanced posts toward Nampiquipa, where General Pershing has established his headquarters.

This operation caused some uneasiness at Fort Bliss, where it was known that a force believed to number about 300 men had gotten out of communication in the Pajarito district. Unless these men have been reached by couriers and effected their escape they are surrounded by far superior numbers of Mexicans.

Villa's reported presence at Noncava, northwest of Parral, may indicate that he is himself planning to attack any American forces that may be isolated in the retrograde movement.

Will Kingston Be Next?

Last week two attractive young girls were very successful in Poughkeepsie selling soap in their household canvass. They did a resounding business and harvested large profits from their sales, as they offered what appeared to be a popular brand of high grade toilet soap for a flattering price. It was later learned that they had in some manner obtained the wrappers and used them on a greatly inferior grade of soap. When they discovered that their activities were being investigated they left hurriedly and from last reports were heading toward Kingston.

Brakeman Killed.

Alexander Ray Buchanan, 25 years old, of Port Jervis, brakeman on a through freight running from Albany to New York, passing through Poughkeepsie at 12:40 a. m., met his death early Sunday morning while the freight was moving through the southern section of Poughkeepsie. His dead body was found lying face downward along side southbound track No. 2 between the factories of the Moline Plow Company and the Delaval Separator Company by S. R. Rugman, station master, and the crew of the switching engine.

Of Course It Was Loaded.

John Madden ten-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Madden of 20 Main street, Poughkeepsie, suffered painful injuries on Saturday afternoon shortly after five o'clock when an old revolver which the little fellow had been playing with was accidentally discharged, the bullet penetrating his hand and tearing apart the flesh. The powder in the bullet was of such a high explosive nature that it went completely through the hand but fortunately broke none of the many bones which are located in this part of the anatomy.

BRITISH DEFEAT GERMAN SQUADRON

Naval Engagement in the North Sea This Morning—German Ships in Flight, Pursued by the British.

By Telegram to The Freeman. London, April 25.—A German naval squadron was defeated by a British squadron in the North Sea today.

An official statement was issued by the Admiralty shortly after noon, stating that the German warships were in flight, being pursued by the British men of war.

The squadrons consisted of battle cruisers, light cruisers and destroyers. The battle was fought so close to the shore that persons on land could hear the roar of the guns and see the shells dropping into the sea.

Firing was first heard about 4 o'clock. The German ships had been able to penetrate the British patrol lines in the darkness and naval officers were not certain whether the Germans had come out to give battle or to bombard the English coast.

Previous to the naval engagement the German ships had shelled the English coast at Lowestoft, killing two men, a woman and a child.

The damage done to property, however, was slight.

From the Admiralty announcement the presence of the German warships in English waters was not known until they were within range of shore. Through the darkness the raiders made their way to the Suffolk coast and then opened fire. The fact that two of the Zeppelins which raided the east coast last night passed over Norfolk county not far from that section of Suffolk which was shelled, led to a theory that the squadron had been guided across the North Sea by the balloons.

This was the second time since the war started that German warships have been able to get within gun range of the English coast. In December, 1914, Scarborough was shelled by a flotilla.

It is believed that some, if not all of the German men of war that took part in the sea fight came from Zebrugga, the German naval base on the Belgian coast.

Just before the Admiralty issued its official statement on the naval battle a press dispatch had been received from Amsterdam, stating that British warships, while patrolling the Belgian coast off Zebrugga, came upon three German destroyers.

The German ships were then fired upon by the British warships. The British ships were then fired upon by the German ships. The British ships were then fired upon by the German ships.

GERMAN REPLY NOT YET READY

By Telegram to The Freeman. Washington, April 25.—Several lengthy communications from Ambassador Gerard at Berlin reached Washington during last night. Copies immediately were sent to the White House and were in the possession of the president before he started for Princeton, where he will vote at today's primary election.

It was semi-officially stated that these messages from the ambassador recited details of his conference with the German Imperial Chancellor and that they asked for additional information regarding the position of the United States.

Germany, it is understood, wants to arrive at an amicable settlement with the United States. But Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg has made it very plain to Ambassador Gerard that the position of the government is most difficult. The German people have construed the American ultimatum as demanding the entire stoppage of submarine warfare, despite the efforts of the German officials to explain that it applies only to present methods against merchant shipping.

Announcement that the American position has been accepted would seriously embarrass the government.

Ambassador Gerard has pointed out, unless it can be accompanied by an explanation which will show that Germany in reality has surrendered no great advantage.

It is confirmed by Ambassador Gerard that the official German reply may not be completed before the end of this week. It is to be sent to field headquarters for the emperor's approval before it is handed to Mr. Gerard. Meanwhile representatives of the Imperial Chancellor and the foreign office are continuing their conferences with the financial experts of the kingdom as to the effect of acceptance or rejection of the American demands. While it is understood that Ambassador Gerard has reported on this phase of the situation, information on the subject is withheld.

The Gerard messages have been communicated only to Secretary Lansing and the president no one else in Washington knows exactly what they contain. They are interpreted favorably because of the attitude of the state department which is distinctly less pessimistic than it was last week.

GAS CO. NOW HAS A LUNG MOTOR

A new safe-guard has been placed about the lives of the employees of the local gas and electric works through the action of the Kingston Gas and Electric Company of this city.

This new safe-guard is the Lungmotor, an artificial respiration machine which already has proved successful in resuscitating hundreds overcome by illuminating and other gases, fumes, drowning, electric shock, or other accident resulting in a suspension of respiration and consequent prevention of delivery of the supply of oxygen in the air necessary for the maintenance of life.

This Lungmotor will replace a Pulmotor which the company has had since it was first introduced into this country from Germany about five years ago.

The Pulmotor was an automatic device and was considered the best device obtainable for resuscitation work until the Lungmotor appeared on the market.

The automatic device seemed to fail in its purpose in some cases where conditions seemed to warrant success in its use. Accordingly an investigation was started to determine if any other later and supposedly better device was obtainable.

The other devices which had been in operation were tested and a careful record kept of their performance in all the supply stations in which they had been installed. When the records of the company's Lungmotors were placed in service and subjected to an equally rigid test. They were in the "safest" hospital after they had been taken apart by experts, each part tested, and then tried under actual life saving conditions.

The records of the Lungmotors were kept as carefully as those of the other machines and the tables of efficiency were compared. The result of the comparison was an order for a Lungmotor to be installed in the local plant.

This device was selected only after a rigid test had been conducted by experts employed by this and other companies for the express purpose of finding some life saving device which could be depended upon to perform its duties without failure.

The Lungmotor will be placed in the electric station on Jansen avenue, which is close to the central fire station and police headquarters. Seconds clipped off the time in which oxygen is supplied to the subject often means life or death.

The electric plant is open 24 hours a day which makes the Lungmotor immediately obtainable at any instant not only for the benefit of the gas and electric company employees, but available for use by physicians in cases of drowning, firemen overcome by smoke or other cases where life is threatened due to the suspension of respiration caused by the inhalation of noxious gases.

While the Lungmotor has been on the market only a very short time its ability to save lives has been demonstrated in hundreds of cities in all sections of the country and under all conditions arising from a lack of proper supply of oxygen.

The toxic nature of the products of the gas works exerts itself when anyone may be accidentally or unknowingly brought into an atmosphere of asphyxiating gases. This consequently introduces an element of danger particularly when accidents to equipment necessary for the manufacture and distribution of illuminating gas may require workmen to be present in an atmosphere charged with gas to the exclusion of air, and makes the need of the most modern and effective resuscitating machine in the plant imperative. By the use of the Lungmotors, oxygen is placed in the lungs of the victim and the normal manner of breathing is re-established.

The machine breathes for the patient until he has thrown off the noxious gases and once again is able to breathe of his own strength. The greatest work of the machine is done while the victim is unconscious and unable to aid himself. When breathing apparently has entirely ceased or is impaired from the effects of the carbon monoxide poisoning, the Lungmotor gives breath, and the oxygen gives life.

The machine is constructed in such a way that it can be operated by any one, whooping cough reported.

BOMBS DROPPED ON DUNKIRK

By Telegram to The Freeman.

Paris, April 25.—Six bombs were dropped upon Dunkirk early today by a German aeroplane.

The war office announced that one woman was killed and three men wounded.

The material damage done by the bombardment was insignificant. Dunkirk is the base hospital point of the French army of the north.

APPLES ARE PLENTIFUL.

Storages on April 1 Held a Peck Per Every Family.

By Telegram to The Freeman. Washington, D. C., April 25.—The condition of the apple market is a matter of grave concern to both growers and dealers all over the country. The report of cold storage holdings of apples on April 1, recently issued by the U. S. department of agriculture, gives some figures which probably will cause all dealers interested in the crop to speed up the movement of this fruit in a most vigorous way.

This report, which was compiled in the office of markets and rural organization, shows that on the first of the present month there were approximately 44 per cent more apples in cold storage than at the same date one year ago, and the season of 1914-15 was one of unusually heavy production. Figures from 427 storages indicate that nearly 33 per cent of the apples which were placed in cold storage by December 1, 1915, were still there on April 1 waiting to be consumed.

Hope that this will be a backward spring is general among apple dealers, for as long as cold days continue a free movement of the fruit is more certain. However, let warm weather come to stay and, judging by experiences of the past, apple sales are very likely to decrease rapidly.

Doubtless there are several reasons for the present conditions. The fact that the past season's commercial crop was considerably smaller than that of a year ago led to expectation on the part of growers and dealers alike, last fall, that the prospective market would be much stronger than has actually proven the case.

As a result, market changed hands at values in excess of those which marketing conditions since show were warranted. This caused higher prices than in 1914 and naturally slowed up the movement. Neither growers nor dealers who held the fruit seemed inclined to push sales with the vigor that was displayed the previous year, when they had an enormous crop to market, and the result was that large quantities of apples were put into cold storage with the hope that the winter and spring markets would strengthen sufficiently to allow a margin of profit.

In spite of the fact that last fall's commercial crop was estimated around ten million barrels short of the previous one, the amount placed in cold storage exceeded that stored in 1914 by about 13.5 per cent.

A second explanation is found in the fact that exports of apples from the ports of the United States alone up to March 1, 1916, were $69,566 barrels less than for a similar period last season, and April reports are expected to show a much larger difference. Had the normal export traffic in apples prevailed, the amount of stock on hand in this country would be considerably smaller.

In a recent brief survey of apple prices in several large markets the following facts were evidenced: Present wholesale prices on barreled stock are very reasonable. In fact, in many places wholesale dealers are selling below cost when storage charges are considered. Investigations made on the same day in New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Buffalo showed that No. 1 cold storage Baldwins and Greenings were ranging from $2.50 to $3.00 per barrel, while Ben Davis were bringing from $1.75 to $2.50, practically every market. Last fall buyers in New York state paid the growers on an average of $3.00 for No. 1 Baldwins and Greenings, $2.25 for Ben Davis, f. o. b. shipping point. Adding to these prices a fair average seasonal storage charge of 45 cents per barrel, and from 25 to 50 cents a barrel for freight and handling, one can see readily that dealers apparently are not profiting at present on many of their apple sales.

The inquiry into retail prices on apples which was made at the same time covering the same grades and varieties, indicates that while they are not unduly high except in a very few instances, still they do not seem to have decreased proportionally to wholesale quotations.

Since the wholesale apple dealers are in daily touch, as a rule, with the retailers to whom they sell, they appear to be the logical factors to initiate an apple campaign and stimulate the interest of the grocers, fruit stand dealers, hucksters and other retail agencies. The wholesalers, in two large markets have organized already and raised a fund to secure desirable publicity. If the dealers in other markets would follow their example and carry out an adequate advertising campaign in the press and in all stores handling apples, the results should be very helpful to all concerned—grower, dealer and consumer.

While the police were scouting around for the miscreant it was learned that the clothes were in the attic, having been put there by the washerwoman, foresighted concerning probable theft but negligent in notifying her mistress. Further investigation has been discontinued.

DID YOU GET ONE OF THOSE LETTERS?

Did you get one of those letters that Judge Hasbrouck sent out? The judge is president of the Bureau of Social Service and he has tried to reach through the mail every man and woman in Kingston who is willing to help those less fortunate than themselves.

If you had one of the letters, please answer it at once by sending $1 to the Municipal Building, on O'Reilly street. This will make you a member for one year, and your charity will be attended to in a systematic and business-like way that will be a satisfaction to you.

The list of members will be published in The Freeman next week and if you give anything at all to the poor, your name should be on it.

If you didn't get a letter, and are the right kind of a person, you will send the dollar anyway.

A good many people are sending a check for $5. This makes you a "sustaining member." It doesn't give you any more privileges but it gives you a wonderful feeling of exhilaration inside of you that beats any spring tonic on the market. Try it.

Remember, there will be nothing in the published list to indicate how much you gave, so you can do exactly as you like about it. Only send your contribution in this week, not forgetting the tonic properties of that "sustaining" stuff.

GERMANY HOPES TO AVERT BREAK

By Telegram to The Freeman. Berlin, April 26.—The International News Service is permitted to state that the German foreign office is exceedingly hopeful of averting a break between Germany and the United States over the submarine issues.

Work on the preliminary draft of a reply to the recent American note was begun this morning after a conference between Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg and Foreign Minister von Jagow. When completed it will be submitted to the emperor for his approval and then be transmitted to Emperor William at army headquarters.

It is hoped that the foreign office that the reply may be started to America Thursday evening or within 24 hours of that time, at the very latest.

Ambassador Gerard declined today to make any comment on the situation, but the optimism at the Imperial Foreign Office was reflected at the American embassy.

PEACE ADVOCATES AT MOHONK IN MAY

R. E. Leighton, president of the Kingston Chamber of Commerce, will represent that body. Andrew D. White, former president of Cornell University, will speak on prospects of an international judicial court. Other speakers on similar subjects will be James Brown Scott, secretary of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace; Walter S. Houston and Alpheus S. Snow, who will discuss sanctions for international agreements, including armed force and economic pressure.

The KITCHEN CABINET

Let your standard be high—and though you may not reach it, you can hardly fail to rise higher than if you aimed at some inferior excellence.

DISHES OF CORNMEAL

Cornmeal is rich in fat and mineral matter, and being comparatively cheap when compared with other grain products is a food that can be used profitably in exchange with them for variety, as well as to cut down expenses.

Steamed Corn Bread.—There are few people who do not enjoy the nutty, brown loaf of steamed bread, and this may be varied by adding different fruits or nuts to it so that it never becomes monotonous.

Take four cupfuls of cornmeal, two cupfuls of graham, a cupful of finely chopped suet, mix well, then add three-fourths of a cupful of dark molasses, two teaspoonfuls of salt, three cupfuls of sour milk and a teaspoonful of soda. The soda may be mixed with the molasses. Add a cupful of stewed prunes cut fine, or a cupful of raisins, and steam in well-greased molds for four hours.

Cornmeal Mush.—A good old New Englander will not ask for a more tasty dish than a good bowl of well-cooked cornmeal mush and rich milk, with perhaps a wisp of salt codfish for an appetizer. To prepare the mush add a cupful of cornmeal very slowly to a quart of boiling water and two teaspoonfuls of salt. Let it cook slowly for an hour. The mush that is left may be poured into a mold and fried in butter after cutting in neat slices.

Scrapie is made by putting the pork scrapie into the hot mush, stirring until well mixed, then pouring into a mold to cook. This is cut in slices and fried and is a great delicacy.

Fried mush with cheese sauce is another well-liked dish. Prepare the sauce by using a tablespoonful of bubbling hot butter stirred with three tablespoonfuls of flour, a half teaspoonful of salt, a half teaspoonful of mustard and two cupfuls of milk. When smooth and thick add a cupful and a half of finely grated cheese, a rich American cheese is best, and when melted serve on the mush.

Grated maple sugar or maple sirup is good on fried mush or small fresh fruits such as strawberries served with sugar and cream makes a most tasty dessert.

12 LIVES LOST IN DUBLIN RIOTS

By Telegraph to The Freeman.
London, April 25. Serious anti-British riots, in which 12 lives were lost, occurred in Dublin on Monday. It was announced in the house of commons today by Augustin Birrell, secretary for Ireland.

Political rioters took possession of the post office and being well armed, defied the police and soldiery to dislodge them.

Troops were rushed to the city from the Curragh Barracks and took possession.

The military authorities have the situation well in hand, Mr. Birrell said.

Five soldiers were shot to death during fighting in the streets of Dublin.

Mr. Birrell said that many arrests had been made.

A plot evidently existed to seize the city, but the plotters were frustrated by the vigilance of the military authorities.

Lord Wimborne succeeded Lord Aberdeen as governor-general of Ireland a year ago this month.

When the new governor-general, who is also the lord lieutenant of Ireland, reached Dublin he was given a reception which apparently showed that the choice was a popular one, but since that time political feeling in southern Ireland has risen to a very high pitch.

METHODISTS WILL MEET AT SPRINGS

On the morning of May 1 there will convene in Saratoga Springs, N. Y., the 27th delegated quadrennial session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. This delegated body of over 800 ministers and laymen in equal number meets every four years to review the work of the church and to revise and add to its legislation. The General Conference is made up of delegates from the 133 annual conferences, the annual conference being the working unit of Methodism. These delegates are elected on a basis of one ministerial delegate for every 45, or fraction not less than two-thirds of 45, ministerial members in any given annual conference, the number of lay delegates always being the same for each conference as its ministerial delegates. Laymen were first admitted to the General Conference in 1872, and in 1900 women were acknowledged as lay members. These lay delegates are elected at a meeting of one representative from each local church in each annual conference territory. For the past 12 months, as the annual conference have met, delegates have been elected.

Allen-Fredd.

At the home of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Parsells on Park street, Ellenville, on Monday, April 24, at 12.30 o'clock, the marriage of Mrs. Parsells's sister, Miss Mary F. Fredd, of Ellenville, and Grant S. Allen of Emporium, Pa., was solemnized by the Rev. W. H. Moser of the M. E. Church, with ring ceremony, in the presence of the bride's relatives, and the groom's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Addison Stratton. Following congratulations, which were very hearty, Mrs. Lucy Brown served a very sumptuous wedding dinner. Very beautiful pink roses adorned the center of table, while a beautiful rose at each plate were the favors. The color scheme pink and white was most beautifully carried out at the table. Other decorations of the home were sweet peas, carnations and the lovely roses. The bride's dress was a blue soft silk and her going-away gown dark blue cloth, with that to match. Mr. Allen, the groom, is one of Emporium's first citizens, and he has chosen for his bride one of Ellenville's most loved young ladies, and a host of friends extend to Mr. and Mrs. Allen very hearty congratulations, with best wishes for a happy and prosperous life together blessed with health. Mr. and Mrs. Allen left during the afternoon for their home at Emporium, Pa.

St. Mark's A. M. E. Church.

This church has been in the community for over sixty years, and whilst the progress of this church has not been by leaps and bounds yet there are tangible evidences of success. In accordance with the system of the Methodist Church her pastors have been many, but the church record shows that each in their time, with the co-operation of its members and largely by the aid of the white people, who are friendly disposed towards this church, we are able to say, "Hitherto Hath the Lord Helped Us." About three years ago a mortgage for three hundred and fifty dollars was met by the means of a rally. Of this amount George Johnson solicited three hundred dollars and turned it over to the church, clearing off the indebtedness of St. Mark's. But since then we have had much repairing done, therefore increased indebtedness. Sunday, April 30, will be rally day. George Johnson and other members of the church have books and are officially authorized to solicit funds for this worthy cause. We are trying to raise two hundred dollars, therefore we appeal to friends and whom this may concern to contribute towards this rally. Up to date we are in receipt of names and amounts of those that have contributed for which we are thankful.

Lost Child Restored to Parents.

Late Monday afternoon the little three year old girl, who was lost on the Strand, was returned to her parents. The little tot was taken in charge by Mrs. Simon Eisenstein of the Strand and it was through her efforts that the child was finally restored to its parents. After vainly hunting along the Strand for the parents of the child Mrs. Eisenstein walked up Hasbrouck avenue and when near East Union street a little girl who had been vainly searching for the lost tot ran out and hugged her to her breast. It was not learned who the parents were but it is understood they live on East Union street.

KINGSTON, N. Y., APRIL 25, 1916.

If the War Department had warning of the Villa raid on Columbus three or four days before it occurred, as charged by Senator Smith of Michigan in the Senate on Monday, but lost sight of it in the excitement of swearing in the new Secretary of War, a deplorable condition is manifested. A serious condition along the Mexican border has prevailed for five years and for many months troops have been on patrol duty. Sniping has been a favorite pastime with Mexican bandits, who not only massacred American residents of Mexico, but frequently assassinated American residents of America. During many months, especially since the European war began, conditions along the border have been far from reassuring, so that it was the business of the department entrusted with the conduct of war and all war-like demonstrations to keep itself fully informed regarding actual conditions. If there had not been any Mexican troubles, a warning of such a raid as that conducted by Villa might be considered to partake of the nature of a Black Hand communication, but in this instance continued trouble had made American border residents so timid that troops had been sent and maintained on the border for the express purpose of protecting them. Demoralization such as the War Department has manifested is inexcusable. Too much of our public affairs receives scant attention. Too often the fact that a man is placed in a position of trust is regarded as an ample qualification for him, else why would he be appointed. Contrary experience does not impress any lesson. Less politics and more conscientious and efficient work at Washington is the great need today.

Unorganized charity covers a greater multitude of sins than the average person comprehends. So many relief agencies abound in some cities that oftentimes graft and mendacity in many forms are directly encouraged, a wasteful condition which sane social workers are striving to eliminate. In Milwaukee a settlement worker stated that no less than seventeen agencies from as many charitable societies "walked over the faces of the members of a single family" in one winter. Such instances of duplication of effort make plain the waste and utter lack of business administration of the uplift in many communities. A distinct trend away from such conditions, so discouraging to contributors of money and time to charitable works, is to be noted in a number of cities. Kingston itself is a pioneer in this field, where the Bureau of Social Service has attested its usefulness by substituting in some degree centralized, consistent labor for the overlapping activities of a dozen different well-intentioned charitable societies. Combination and elimination are two essentials to well-conducted social welfare work, a fact which experts are coming to realize the country over. That Kingston realized this situation early and organized on a permanent basis to meet its requirements is cause for congratulation.

Nearly one-third of the tax levy for 1916 in New York city will be used in paying past indebtedness, and the balance will be expended for the ordinary running expenses of the municipality. Of each $100 in taxes collected, $21.55 will be expended for interest on city debt, $6.66 for redemption of city debt and $4.21 for sinking fund installments. Figures for other cities are not available, but the trend of municipal expenditures has been along the same lines as in New York, although in lesser amount. An individual who spent one-third of his income in wiping out past indebtedness would be commended, as a city should be, but few individuals or cities do it. Even when they do, there is a natural disposition to question what special cause there has been in the past to cause an indebtedness so large that one-third of the annual income subsequently is required to wipe it out, especially when the one-third expenditure must be continued for many years. That is precisely the situation with most municipalities and there is a constant invitation to contract new indebtedness for feds and let the future take care of itself. Future generations everywhere must pay for municipal joy riding of the past. Faddists never urge municipalities to save. True, statements are issued showing how much money can be saved annually, but the aggregate seldom is less than it was previously, and usually it is larger each year than in the preceding year. Under the name of improvement all sorts of expenses and debts are contracted, until the way to discover new sources of taxation has become a specialty by itself.

Not the First Time.

They are telling in Canada a story which has a flavor of the times when good stories than we hear told now used to originate in the law courts, relates The Christian Science Monitor. A young lawyer, according to the report, pleaded before Justice Greenshield that a case in which the attorney's firm was interested should be postponed because the partner was busy in another court. "Proceed," said Justice Greenshield. "We have the record, we have the judgment. We will help you." "But," protested the young lawyer, "I have not studied the case." "It matters not," came from the bench; "proceed, we will help you." "But, my lord," persisted the young man, "I know nothing about the case." "Proceed, proceed," was the inexorable command, "it is not the first time you have appeared before this court in a case you knew nothing about."

No Use Trying to Bolt.

It is said, according to The Buffalo Commercial, that after a great Turkish defeat at Sarikamish a Russian officer met a party of 500 captured Turks being brought in by 15 smiling Cossacks. There was something obviously the matter with the prisoners; their hands were all mysteriously occupied. The officer halted the Cossack in charge and asked: "Have you got a dancing class there, or what?" The Cossack grinned more broadly and replied: "Well, you see, excellency, there's more than 500 of them, only 15 of us, so there was a chance that they might be up to something if we weren't careful. So before we started we sent round and cut off all their hooks, belts and trouser buttons. Now they've got their hands full and it's no use trying to bolt."

SOCONY KERO-SCENES

"Goodness, have you one of those oil heaters too?"

"Yes—in fact we've got two of them. They're really jawfully convenient for warming up out of the way rooms and for helping out in extra cold weather. And in the Fall, they save coal because we don't have to light the furnace so soon."

"But don't they smoke terribly—and smell?"

HEALTH RULES FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Albany, April 25.—Rules for the isolation and exclusion from the public schools of the state of school children who are visited with communicable diseases, have just been prepared and distributed by the state department of health. The rules were formulated by Dr. Herman M. Biggs, state commissioner of health.

With great care, a digested list of symptoms through which the presence of many of the more common diseases may be determined, has been made. Chickenpox, diphtheria, measles, German measles, mumps, scarlet fever, smallpox, acute sore throat, and whooping cough are listed among the maladies which children are likely to catch.

The recent bulletin from the health department under discussion, is in reality a chart issued by the division of public education of the state health department and is intended for every school teacher. Very little is omitted which will aid in the quick discovery by a teacher of a case of illness of a communicable character among her pupils if the instructions on the chart are followed.

In addition to dealing with the symptoms of the diseases listed, the chart also sets forth the method to be pursued to insure the isolation of the unfortunates and the time that they shall be kept away from their class companions. In the case of chickenpox, a twelve day isolation is prescribed; for diphtheria, until the patient has two successful cultures from throat and nose which contain no diphtheria bacilli; for measles, at least seven days from onset; for German measles, at least eight days after recovery; for mumps, two weeks and until after the disinfection of the afflicted person for scarlet fever, at least thirty days and until discharges have ceased and the disinfection of the case; for smallpox, until after the recovery and disinfection of the pupil. A period of isolation of eight weeks is prescribed in cases of whooping cough, while in the case of acute sore throat it is recommended that the patient be isolated from his school companions or playmates until recovery.

Diphtheria is characterized as being very dangerous both during attack and from after-effects. It is recommended that when a case of diphtheria breaks out in school that all children suffering from sore throats be excluded.

The after-effects of measles are declared to be often severe and it is pointed out that the period of the greatest infection is during the first three or four days before the rash appears.

Measles is not regarded as being particularly dangerous though the regulations regarding its treatment and diagnosis are necessarily strict because the malady is frequently confused with scarlet fever.

Mumps seldom leave after effects yet are very infectious, the chart states.

Scarlet fever is set down as dangerous both during its attack and from after-effects. The disease is more fatal to children under ten years of age than those who are older.

Smallpox is characterized as peculiarly infectious; immediate vaccination is recommended. Whooping cough causes great disability and the after-effects are frequently severe.

Mr. and Mrs. Boyle left for New York on the 5:21 train, and will reside at 340 West 11th street. They will be at home after April 27th.

Charity Ball.

The armory presented a remarkably gay and festive appearance on Monday evening when it was filled with dancers and guests of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Benedictine Sanitarium attending the annual charity ball. A splendid sum must have been realized for the benefit of the free ward in the sanitarium, the object of the dance. The armory was handsomely decorated with American flags and pennants in profusion, with here and there touches of purple and white, the Benedictine colors. The flower and cigar booth, with its decorations of evergreens and Easter lilies and tiny many-colored electric lights, and the lovely cut flowers, was a picture. So was the lemonade booth, decorated with palms and potted Easter lilies and roses. The supper room was particularly attractive, with palms in the arched spaces about the room and a vase of roses on each table. Rugs and mission furniture, together with more palms, formed an attractive reception room, where the guests were received by Dr. Mary Gage-Day, chairman of the auxiliary, wearing a gown of pale blue with net and lace overdress; Mrs. Frank Jeagher, in a gown of black lace; Mrs. William Rieser, costumed in white silk with embroidered net draperies; Mrs. Mark O'Meara, in a gown of black crepe de chene and lace; Mrs. Thomas Diamond, gowned in black marquisette; Mrs. H. F. Meinhardt, wearing black lace and net over white silk; Mrs. Grove Webster, Jr., in a frock of white figured silk and white lace; Mrs. William Rafferty, costumed in ashes of roses crepe de chene; Mrs. Andrew Cook, gowned in black lace and silk; Mrs. N. D. J. Murphy, wearing white silk and pale blue chiffon.

Early in the evening an all too short promenade concert was given by Muller's orchestra, which as usual played in a manner that captivated both the lovers of music and the lovers of dancing. Then the Rev. Father Wermuth announced that there would be a short program before dancing began. The program was arranged by Father Wermuth, the first number being a vocal solo, "The Sunshine of Your Smile," very charmingly sung by Miss Maude Weaver, who is possessed of an unusually pleasing voice and sang well. A bass solo by Cornelius Heilmann was also enjoyed. Mr. and Mrs. Scherer then gave a comedy sketch in song and dialogue and were followed by George Schupp, comedian, who gave a German monologue. The program was brought to a close with the singing of Schubert's "Serenade," most admirably sung by Miss Helen Stern, niece of Dr. Stern, who is blessed with a particularly full, sweet soprano voice, and who sang with appreciation and a charming motive. In response to the hearty applause Miss Stern sang an encore, "I Hear You Calling Me."

With the first notes of dance music the floor was filled with dancers, the costumes of the ladies and young girls being charming indeed in their quaintness and daintiness. On every hand the music was spoken of in the most complimentary terms and during the evening those present were given a special treat in being privileged to listen to "The Tenth Regiment March," composed by Major George Chandler and played publicly for the first time by the orchestra. The spirited composition was received with much applause. One of the especially pretty events of the evening was the presentation to Dr. Day, chairman of the auxiliary, who has been an indefatigable in her efforts in behalf of the good work of the organization, of a huge bouquet of carnations, given to her in a most winsome manner by little Miss Sancha Barmann, in behalf of the auxiliary.

The dance was thoroughly enjoyed by all present.

WANDERING MAN MAY BE SMITH

The county officials are certain that they have finally identified the man who was found wandering about the village of Woodstock last Wednesday and have notified relatives of the man, who will probably be able to identify him.

The man is thought to be Vincent J. Smith, who with his uncle came to Zena, near Woodstock, in February and bought a farm there. Mr. Smith came from Albany and had only lived in that vicinity since February, which explains why no one in that neighborhood was able to identify him when he was found wandering about the place. When first brought to this city after being declared insane by Dr. Downer, he had a suspicion of many persons who came near him that they were going to kill him. He gave his name as James Myers but was unable to give any information as to where he had lived or who his relatives were. After being examined by Drs. Buckley and O'Leary at the county jail he was declared insane and has since been taken to Middletown.

The supposed relatives have been notified and will be taken to Middletown where a positive identification will be made if possible. The description of the man found near Woodstock conforms with the description of the missing Smith as sent out by his relatives at Zena.

When brought to the jail last Wednesday the man seemed to be nervous and afraid of everyone, especially so of colored people who came near. From a casual observation he seemed to have been badly frightened and being in a weakened condition his mind had been affected. Descriptions of the man and the clothing he wore closely resemble the description sent out by the people at Zena and only the positive identification is needed to clear up the mystery.

ALBANY SPECIALIST

Makes Remarkable Cures of Chronic Diseases

Will be in Kingston

FRIDAY, APRIL 28th
AT 340 BROADWAY

Dr. Swinburne of Albany
Cures Difficult Cases Without Surgery

The craze for cutting is still growing. A great many doctors advise operations when entirely unnecessary. Not that it is always done to make more money from the case, but because many physicians have not given sufficient time to study and research to enable them to make correct diagnosis of obscure diseases, or to understand how to treat such cases successfully with improved medical methods. Too many doctors merely accept the ideas and follow the practice of other physicians and advise operations because it is a popular medical craze. Some doctors will even perform operations, when they know that other treatment would produce a cure. Surgery may be necessary in some cases, but many serious cases, where physicians had declared an operation was the only means which would offer a hope of saving life, the use of the proper treatment did produce a cure, and the patient restored to health, without the danger of an operation. A recent case will prove of interest. A young lady, supposed to be suffering from appendicitis. Four doctors, two of whom were prominent surgeons, had advised this patient that an operation was absolutely necessary. A thorough examination found it was not a case of appendicitis at all, but one of obstruction of the bile ducts and impaction of the gall bladder. Treatment was given immediately, which would remove the obstruction, and reduce the inflammation and in a few days the patient was entirely relieved of all suffering, and has since made a complete recovery. There are many similar cases where operations were performed and the results often times proved fatal, where a correct diagnosis and the proper treatment would have saved human life and suffering. Cases of gall stone can often be cured without operation, as well as many other troubles, including special diseases of women. If patients are advised to submit to the dangers of surgery, they should not consent until they obtain the opinion of Dr. Swinburne, a specialist who believes more in the efficiency of improved treatment rather than the wild craze for operations.

Does Newspaper Advertising Pay?

A large paint manufacturer asked this question of retailers throughout the country:

NO. 7 SAID:

"It has never entered our minds that there might be any question as to whether or not it paid to advertise, in our home paper especially.

"We can conceive no idea or plan wherein a person or firm could succeed without advertising."

Rather positive talk, is it not? Yet any storekeeper can prove it for himself.

THEY SAY.

A Poughkeepsie press agent is the latest on the police records.

The Kingston Yacht Club could use the abandoned lighthouse very acceptably as a club house. Uncle Sam won't have much trouble finding a purchaser anyway and can probably give good title to the under water realty.

Everybody is wondering what Kingston's message to the Golden Gate will be. It is certainly hard to think of any chance after dinner pleasantry that is worth transmitting that distance.

A new way for a circus to herald its approach is to start a real estate boom to the effect that it is considering the place where it is going to show as a site for a permanent headquarters. This creates more comment than naming the perennial baby camel "just born" after each place visited. Wells Hawkes and his followers should take notice.

One place where long distance talk will be cheap is at the coming Chamber of Commerce dinner where diners will listen to the roar of the surf and California will hear the substance of soap or the gnashing of nuts depending upon the course at which communication is established. It is a sign of progress on the part of Kingston district telephone heads, who then stage this interesting advertising attraction for this city. Motion pictures show the waves making breaks in harmony with the receivers which is more than most after dinner speakers do.

A Freeman man, captivated by the golden sunshine of Friday afternoon, tramped into the country hereabout in search of migrating birds and wild flowers. In a charming nook within sight of the golden final of the First Dutch Church steeple he found the trailing arbutus, the lavender tinted hepatica, the pink veined anemone (the wind flower of the Greeks which The Freeman man has picked many a time on the slopes of the Matterhorn) and he found as well the golden marsh marigold and but a short distance away was a snow drift hugging a stone wall. There were robins, bluebirds, purple finches, and purple grackles, the red headed woodpecker, and the meadow lark. Both the flowers and the birds are late in coming.

THE HIGH SCHOOL PLAY

Unusually Elaborate Arrangements Made for a Successful Production

The conspicuous new thing in local theatricals will be the production here Friday evening, April 28, at the high school of the romantic comedy, Rose O' Plymouth Pore. It promises to be one of the most pretentious plays ever staged in this city, and an amateur talent. Nothing has been overlooked to make this play as near the same production as when it was presented in New York for the first time.

Special electrical effects are now being placed on the high school stage and a large brick fire place is being built. In fact all the scenes, properties and costumes are being looked after just the same as in the big Broadway first night. Special music has been sent from New York for the play and the apparatus for the big snow storm scene in the second act is being built under the direction of Vincent Dailley, the director. The lightning effects for the climax of the third act will make this scene an exact reproduction of the original show in New York.

The leading girl character, Rose O' Plymouth Pore, will be played by Kathleen Snyder. Miss Snyder is going to be the one big surprise of the production. She plays the emotional role of Rose with a depth of feeling that takes her out of the ranks of amateurs and places her among the professional women who have met success with this part in the past.

The character of Miles Standish is one of those roles that people remember long after they have forgotten the plot of the play. This part will be taken by Edward "An Winkle" whose remarkable versatility is sure to make him a great favorite with the audience.

Samuel Goldwasser in the character of John Marceen has a dramatic role that will be a treat to the audience. Mr. Goldwasser's ability to rise to an emotional height or fall to an emotional depth is most apt to make him one of the stars of the evening.

The part of Barbara Standish played by Jessie Barton is one of the most beautiful Puritan parts ever written and calls for some exceeding good acting. For a young girl to play such a role in such an excellent manner as Miss Barton does is a very remarkable accomplishment.

THE UPLIFT IN LISTER

A Neighbor Points Out One Thing We Have Escaped

The Kingston Freeman displays a feeling of shame and humiliation at the discovery that Lister county is lacking in shower baths for the prisoners in the county jail.

We take it from an editorial in The Freeman that some state board has found Lister county shockingly remiss in the way of shower baths and that old Lister deeply feels this public announcement of her unprogressive and un-uplifted condition.

The Freeman writes sarcastically as it ponders the absence of perfumed baths for the county guests. The Lister jail lacks showers also it lacks a moving picture show and greenhouses and sofa pillows and other aesthetic and uplifting instrumentalities.

The Freeman seems inclined to get mad about it and suggests that jails be made so nice that everybody will want to go there. This is a notion of crime would be at once solved. The Freeman is unduly excited. If it wants to undergo a violent affliction of the uplift it ought to be satisfied. Newburgh was surveyed once to the tune of about $500 and it was worth the money. One of the dunning counts lodged against the city was that the county jail actually did not provide white sheets for the prisoners bunks. Think of the humiliation Newburgh suffered when this fact was published to the world. The idea of a hobo who had been accustomed to sleeping under a tree being leaved of white sheets by the rigidly taxpayers. The memory of that exposure still rankles. Lister has a chance to rehabilitate herself in the public estimate by putting in a swimming pool and bowling alley for its prisoners. Its disgrace might have been keener if at least has escaped a survey.—Newburgh Journal

Beautiful Morning View

The comparatively rare phenomena of heavy banks of white cumulus clouds coving the lower slopes of the Catskills while the summits of the mountain range stood out clear and sharply defined characterized the early morning today. So impressed was the late General Samson with the beauty of this phase of Catskill mountain mornings that he had the celebrated painter of Thomas Cole the artist delineating this characteristic lithographed and distributed throughout the country. One or two copies still can be found in Kingston.

PITCHER ALEXANDER GOES UP IN AEROPLANE

Manager Pat Moran Watching His Star Pitcher Make an Ascent.

Grover Cleveland Alexander, the Phillies' star pitcher and the premier boxman of the National league, made his first ascension in an aeroplane with Johnny Green, the aviator, who made the trip across the Lookout Mountains in Tennessee.

Manager Moran was very reluctant about letting Alexander make the trip, he does not want his $40,000 star to get the habit of making these aerial ascensions nor does he want to run the risk of Alexander getting hurt.

Alexander has been priming himself for the season's opening and is in fine shape. He is confident that he will duplicate his wonderful performance of last year.

WHY SCHAEFER WAS SIGNED

Manager Donovan and Dutch Comedian Were Best of Friends While Playing With Tigers.

When they were together on the Tigers many years ago Germany Schaefer and Bill Donovan were the best of friends. This may have been one reason why the Yankees signed up the comedian. At any rate, the following comedy from New York lists them as reasonable:

"Well, Bill," said Germany, according to the story, "I see we have nailed Lee Magee?"

Manager Donovan smiled and nodded.

"Looks as if we ought to have a great season—eh, Bill?"

Donovan grinned.

"Nothing like the old Tigers standing together—eh, Bill?"

A few days later Schaefer won the right to say "we" when he attached his name to the papers.

TYLER HAS UNIQUE DELIVERY

Big Southpaw Flinger of Boston Braves Is Most Effective Hurler in National League.

George Tyler, the southpaw member of the pitching trio that made the Braves the sensation of the National league, is considered the most effective left-hander in the National.

He owes his effectiveness mostly to his overhand motion and to his cross-fire.

Overhand pitching southpaws are rare. Waddell was one and there have been few others. But overhand cross fire twirlers have not existed until Tyler showed himself one. Usually the cross-fire is a side-arm ball. Tyler throws it by taking a long step toward first base.

The ball does not leave his hand until he is nearly a yard away from the batter's lane and comes sailing in on a right-hand hitter and away from the left-hander. Tyler has a wonderful curve and a fine change of pace.

His slow ball is held loosely in his hand, exactly like his fast one, but no pressure is exerted except by his thumb and little finger. The ball is "covered" and it is impossible to tell what he will throw.

The Secret.

"What is an amateur?" is still one of the raging queries of the hour. But, in spite of all the recent discussion, we haven't changed the answer we evolved four years ago, viz., "Anyone who can get away with it."—New York Tribune.

DIAMOND NOTES

Connie Mack still insists on using recruits on the mound.

Neil Brady, former Yank pitcher, is now with the Columbus team.

Fort Worth has released Gust. He was told to blow to other parts.

The new Cleveland Indians threaten to be a scrappy bunch this year.

Reb Russell is fooling a lot of fans who think he won't show much this season.

Right now is the time for each city to announce that it has a baseball pennant winner.

Every big leaguer has a dual nationality. He is a hero one day, a boob the next.

Yes, Montague, if Eddie Plank had been pitching in '61 he would have gone to the front.

With Tris Speaker again safe in the fold, the Red Sox are banking on the American league flag.

Baseball teams just now are all looking hopefully at the upper apartments in the percentage columns.

Jimmy Callahan's Pittsburgh Pirates have been forbidden to smoke cigarettes. The stogie trust getting busy, eh?

Buck Herzog is starting early. He made such a scene in an exhibition game at New Orleans that he was put off the field.

Connie Mack has cautioned his Athletics against overeating at their next appearance at the world's champions' banquet table.

Clayton Perry, recently released by the Mobile Southern league club, has caught on with the St. Joseph Western league club.

Massey, the young shortstop of the Pelicans, is a pretty nifty looking youngster. He is just out of the University of Texas.

We learn that George Sizer comes from a Good Swiss family. We thought there was something familiar about George's windup.

Pitchers Von Steinberg and Outfielders Koroly and Swaney are no longer Pirates. Jimmy Callahan turned them over to the Wheeling team.

"Texas Ed" Appleton, the young pitcher of the Robins, is developing a knuckle ball. Robbie already claims that "Texas Ed" can break the ball either in or out.

Hans Lobert is having a lot of trouble with his throwing arm, but otherwise he is in shape, according to a Gotham baseball scribe. Otherwise, Ed Walsh still would be spitball king.

While Myers and Meyers were working as a battery for Connie Mack the other day, Adams and Adams were in the points for the Phillies. Some troubles ahead for Philadelphia scorers is right.

The Luck of Feng Pu

Strange Way Fortune Came to an American in Shanghai

By CLARISSA MACKIE

In the narrow, crooked Street of a Thousand Ways the Chinese crowd suddenly paused and then scattered to huddle against the doorways. There was the shrill cry of coolies, and around a corner came a mandarin's curtained chair borne by swift runners. A dash of green and gold and crimson, and the retinue swept by, leaving the pedestrians free to proceed along the muddy way.

John Marston, resuming his stroll through the street of old Shanghai, stooped and picked a bit of yellow out of the mud. It was a flat piece of amber carved into dragon form, and a morsel of golden chain hinted that it might have formed part of a handsome ornament. He tucked it into his pocket, not knowing that the deed was to affect all his after life.

John Marston's presence in Shanghai was, in a way, accidental. He had started on a tour of the orient in the capacity of private secretary to a man of large affairs. His employer had died while they were in the Chinese treaty port, and John was adrift with little money, a few new acquaintances and a big appetite for work. Incidentally there was a girl back home in Massachusetts who was waiting for him to make good.

He pocketed the amber dragon and went on his way toward the gate which led out upon the Bund.

He paused for a moment in the opening to examine the amber ornament he had found.

A viselike grip on his arm drew him back into the shadow of the city gate. He whirled about and wrenched himself free to confront a small, wizened Chinaman whose slant eyes spat hateful sparks.

"Have got?" shrieked the man.

"Have got what?" growled the American.

"So?" The other pointed at the bit of golden chain dangling from John's fingers. "Have got him?"

"You mean this?" asked the American, unclosing his hand. The other nodded.

"You come along. No can tell now. You gabe good luck?"

John laughed. "Oh, I know what it means, but it doesn't come my way," he said.

The other frowned impatiently. "Come! Heap luck!" he insisted.

"Prove it!" agreed John Marston, and, pocketing the bauble, prepared to look at him under flickering lids.

"Heaven knows I need it—whole chunks of good luck," groaned Marston, with a sudden, bleak realization of his position.

"Then the prophecy will come true," murmured the Asiatic.

Marston stared. "What prophecy?"

"The prophecy of the geomancer who foretold that on a certain day I should be traveling through the Street of a Thousand Ways and I should lose my luck—and should find it again."

"Well?"

"I lost my luck—my lucky stone today—and my servant Ping saw you pick it up," said the mandarin quietly.

Marston pulled the amber dragon from his pocket. "This is yours?" he asked.

Feng Pu's eyes glinted. "Yes," he hissed. "It has all been foretold long ago while I was still a young man. A geomancer in the bazaar predicted that I should lose my luck and find a friend and find my luck all in the same day."

"Thank you," smiled Marston amiably. "Am I your friend or your luck?"

"My friend, I hope," said the other quietly. "This is no jest—this stone."

He fastened the amber trinket to a long jade chain which swung from his neck. "This stone is the luck of my family, but there is greater luck in store for the one who solves the secret. See?"

He twisted the tail of the amber dragon and revealed a tiny cavity, from which he drew a bit of oiled silk.

"It was given to my grandfather by an American sea captain who was taken prisoner by some river pirates. He had found some treasure and hidden it, and he would not give it up to the pirates. We never saw him again, and my father could not understand the directions, and so we have waited, hoping that some day we would meet a foreigner we could trust." He stopped abruptly. His greed for the legendary treasure had for the moment overcome his native caution, but recovering himself he watched the young American carefully while he unrolled the tiny scroll of oiled silk, on which appeared neat black letters.

Marston frowned at the scroll, stared and went off into a gale of laughter.

Feng Pu scowled angrily. Who was this American dog that he should make a jest of a mandarin's lucky stone? But he must know the secret. Then the American could be dropped over into the river for all Feng Pu cared. He shrugged his fat shoulders.

John Marston stared at the nursery fable that was neatly lettered on the little scroll—

Ding, dong bell,
Ping's in the well.
Who put her in?
Little Thomas Green.

"Was the captain's name Green—Thomas Green?" he asked Feng Pu.

"So says the scroll," nodded the mandarin stiffly.

"And do you know the nature of the treasure?"

"Precious stones."

"And have you any idea where Captain Green might have hidden them?"

with a wide, cruel mouth, his right-gowned figure was sprawled in a carved ebony chair, while his yellow fingers held a gold lacquered pipe.

He lifted his heavily lidded eyes, and a glitter came into them as he saw the American and his companion.

"Ah, Ping," he said in good English. "You have brought the keeper of my luck!"

"Yes, gracious highness," stammered the wizened little man.

"Be seated, please," Feng Pu waved Marston to another carved chair. "Tea, Ping," he commanded.

"This call is an unexpected pleasure," remarked Marston coolly.

"Not unexpected by me," smiled the mandarin.

"What do you mean?" asked the other quickly. "Why," he added, sharply, "you are getting under way. Where are we going?"

"Be calm, my friend," smiled the other imperturbably. "I am merely taking you for a pleasure trip."

"Thank you, but I cannot go today," decided Marston hastily.

Feng Pu sighed. "You Americans are so abrupt," he murmured regretfully.

Marston laughed heartily. "Not as abrupt as you Chinese," he said. "Fifteen minutes ago I had never heard of you, and now you are taking me on a pleasure trip to—where?"

"A place of good luck," said the other looking at him under flickering lids.

mouth of the passage a cat's head rudely scratched on one of the stones.

Still stooping, he stretched his arm and jerked out the stone. A small leather pouch tumbled out into his hand. That was all. Crouching there, he cautiously opened the pouch, hiding it from the curious eyes above.

A score of rare jewels flashed into his palm—rubies, emeralds and two large yellow diamonds. Hastily he divided them equally. His own share he slipped into his vest pocket. He returned the others to the leather pouch and called to the Chinese to pull him out.

The mandarin was watching him narrowly. There was a crafty look on the faces of the servants. He knew that his life was not worth tuppence. He was glad that an automatic gun was in his hip pocket.

"You have found my luck?" asked Feng Pu.

Marston put the bag into the eager hands.

Feng Pu opened it and caressed the stones with greedy glances.

"There are only ten," he muttered.

"Five will satisfy me," put in Marston amiably.

Feng Pu started as if reminded of something unpleasant. He returned the stones to the bag, dropped it into his capacious sleeve and nodded to the servants.

There was a concerted rush upon the American. He was not taken by surprise, so when they lifted him to the wall curb he was prepared for the fall and dropped lightly upon his feet.

A shower of large stones were hurled after him. He crept into the passage way and counted his half of the treasure. "It's a good thing I counted out my half first," he chuckled. "Now for home and Mabel!"

He waited until the stars shone overhead, and then he made his way through the passage. Just as his stock of matches gave out he smelled the salt air of the river and presently pushed his way through a thicket and came out upon the river bank. In the distance gleamed the lights of the city. The secret passage of the old river pirates had saved his life.

A lonely sampan man heard his hail and took him down to Shanghai. Marston's generous fare electrified the boatman.

The next morning John Marston sailed away from the China shore. When it was only a flat yellow streak in the distance he swung his hat in farewell.

"Talk about the luck of Feng Pu!" he chuckled. "It isn't a patch on the luck of John Marston." And today John Marston's oldest son is named Thomas Green Marston.

Dangerous Talk.

A new arrival at a certain boarding house was a man who had taken part in a famous arctic exploration, and at dinner time he often regaled the other boarders with stories of his adventures.

"Yes," he said after one particularly thrilling description, "we were slowly starving to death. Just when things were at the last gasp one fellow had an idea. He cut up our boots and made soup of them, and—"

"Hush! Hush!" hissed all the other boarders anxiously. "Don't let the landlady hear you!"—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

American Citizens.

In practice there is no such thing as a "citizen of the United States." Such "citizens" are about as mythical as the mermaid. In order to vote, for instance, one must bring his citizenship down to the concrete and become a citizen of New York, or of some one of the other states. You cannot vote in New York unless you are a citizen of New York; and the same is true of all the other states. The "citizen of the United States" is a very vague gentleman.

Early Discouraged.

Mother—"No, Betty darling, I can't button your boots for you. Now you have a little sister you must learn to do things for yourself." Betty—"Shall I always have to do things for myself?" Mother—"Yes, darling." Betty—"Then I don't ask I shall like life."—Punch.

New Vegetable.

Dasheens, a succulent vegetable, resembling the mushroom, are being shipped to the northern markets from Florida, where they are grown according to instructions sent out by the department of agriculture.

SHAKESPEARE WAS SHREWD.

Post Was an Excellent Business Man, but Fond of Litigation.

One reason may be given for Shakespeare not publishing his plays, and we have reason to think it was of a kind to appeal to him. There was no copyright, and to publish the plays was to lessen their financial value to his company. This "gentle Will," this "sweetest Shakespeare," this "Swan of Avon," was an admirable man of business. If we had only the records of the law courts, in fact, we might not be able to think so very well of him. He had a keenness for litigation which he seems to have inherited from his father. As a taxpayer he was slow, if not positively evasive. He was apparently negligent of a debt contracted by his wife. Like many men of property, he evaded the restrictions against brewing malt liquor for his private use, being in his way a moonshiner.

Liberal in giving aid and lending money to his friends in need, he was strict in collecting debts. At about the time he wrote the final version of "Hamlet" he sued the village apothecary at Stratford to recover a small loan, and while he was at work on the world tragedy of "Antony and Cleopatra" he engaged in litigation that brought him in contact with the village blacksmith, a state of affairs that Emerson relates with something akin to horror. He conspired with his father to secure from the conniving Herolds' college a shady coat of arms and the right to subscribe himself "gent" and, while apparently not actively aiding an attempt to inclose Stratford common lands in defiance of the rights of the people, he at best remained strictly neutral toward the project.

Careless as he seems to have been as to his fame as a dramatist, he was in business by no means above current standards of conduct. One gathers that the chief interest of his later years was to live at ease as a gentleman and provide well for his family. It is related on pretty good authority that he died of "a fever" after "a merry meeting" at Stratford with his old friend Ben Jonson and the poet Drayton. But it is not unlikely that the true cause of his fever was not drunk but the insatiable condition of the street in which he lived.—John Corbin in New York Times.

LOST BY LACK OF NERVE.

Louis Philippe Was Wanting When the Crisis Came.

Baroness Hauke wrote in her diary the following account of the abdication of Louis Philippe of France on the day of that remarkable occurrence:

"An aide-de-camp of the minister of war who was in the king's cabinet when he abdicated gave me a detailed account of this most signal piece of cowardice. He had reviewed the troops in the Carrousel on horseback, highly roused, when a cry was raised, 'Vive les faubourgs!' No one had any orders; no one gave any. The mob rushed forward, shouting, 'Vive la garde nationale—vive les troupes' and shook hands with the outposts.

"The king retreated precipitately with his sons, and a subaltern of the national guard rushed into the palace asking to see him. He was admitted and in the greatest agitation said: 'Your majesty must abdicate.'

"Very well," says the king. 'In favor of my grandson?'

"No, unconditionally," says the young and self-elected mouthpiece of public opinion.

"Would you believe it? Of all who were congregated around the royal person I scarcely alone said, 'Go down and head your troops. Fight for your crown and your dynasty.' He was overruled, and they all marched out of the palace except the Duchesse d'Orleans, her children and the Duc de Nemours."

WHAT THEY THINK ABOUT THE BRIDGE FLIM-FLAM

Prominent Officials and Citizens Express the Opinion That Some Way Should be Found to Build the Bridge Without Further Delay—Various Plans Suggested.

Elimination of furlongs in the plans for the bondout bridge would bring the cost of the entire structure well within the appropriation of $200,000 set aside by the state highway department, in the opinion of a practical bridge-builder who submitted a bid on the contract. Some of these frills are needless concrete arches and worse than needless block stone paving of the roadway over the bridge. Cutting these down with other items too numerous to mention would make possible the letting of the contract at a price safely within the engineer's estimates.

Discussion of ways and means to the speediest possible realization of the bridge was had at noon today at an executive session of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce held in the Eagle Hotel. Mayor Palmer Canfield, Jr., Republican State Committeeman Philip Elzing and President Elvah Bostart of the Automobile Club were present to join in consideration of the subject.

The Chamber of Commerce is most anxious to get an immediate action in being sought which will bring quickest results. The directors did not care to discuss the subject today save that to say if there is any feasible course to pursue to bring about early construction of the bridge all the powers at the disposal of the organization will be exerted to the utmost.

Interest, not unmixed with indignation, was aroused by the publication in The Freeman of the fact that all bids for the bridge had been rejected because the highway department had delayed the matter until prices of material had soared and had further loaded up the plans with costly and useless frills. Among those who have expressed their opinions to Freeman reporters are the following:

The Mayor's Plea for Unity.

Mayor Canfield said: "I regret exceedingly the situation that has developed. Nobody foresaw or contemplated it. I understand that the highway department is just as much surprised at the amount of the bids as anybody else. It seems to me the first question is whether or not the plans can be so modified as to bring the cost within the estimate of the highway department. If the legislature were still in session application could be made to them for a special appropriation to make up the difference. That remedy being gone for this year it would not seem advisable to wait until the legislature convenes next year to surmount the difficulty in that manner. If the question should come up to have the county and the city of Kingston to raise the additional amount needed by taxation, it would probably have to be apportioned so that the city would raise perhaps $10,000, and the county the other $30,000, of which latter amount the city would indirectly have to pay about $10,000, which would mean a division between the county and the city.

"If the latter plan should be deemed advisable the city might contribute its share by extending Wurts street across Abner street to the point where the bridge itself would rest upon the city side and the city bear the expense of putting such part in shape and paying the cost thereof. "The latter suggestion might be considered only as a final resort if it meant the bridge or no bridge, and the other plans and recommendations should fail.

"If the people of Kingston really want the bridge the situation that has developed makes it absolutely necessary that all should work in unison with the one object of getting the bridge in view and submerging all personal feelings and interests."

Judge Clearwater's Views.

Judge Clearwater said he knew of but four ways in which the difficulty could be surmounted. The first was by a modification of the plans of the state highway commission so as to permit of the construction of a less expensive bridge. He was not a bridge builder, and was unable to speak with authority upon bridge construction, but he was reliably informed that the plans could be modified so that a perfectly safe and fine-looking structure could be built within the appropriation. The second was an application to the legislature for an increased appropriation. This inevitably would result in delay as the legislature had adjourned, and would not convene before January, 1917. In view of the fact that the bridge was an imperative part of the proposed state highway through Rockland, Orange, Ulster and Delaware counties, on to the west, there should be no question as to the appropriation of sufficient money to build it. It was a mistaken idea that the bridge was only important to the people of Ulster county. The third plan was legislation which would permit the city of Kingston, and the county towns to raise the necessary amount by taxation. This the judge did not regard as feasible. The fourth method was individual contributions from residents of the city and the county. This he regarded as chimerical. He expressed his disgust and regret over the delay, the cause of which he said was perfectly well understood, and was not Monday.

of recent origin. The cost of the bridge as planned he said had been greatly increased, largely due to the advance in the price of steel and labor. The present administration of the state highway department, the judge said, seemed to have acted with good faith.

Mr. Cook's Views.

Former Assemblyman Andrew J. Cook said today: "There have been several sets of plans for the Sleighsborough bridge, but the plans on which bids were solicited, I am informed, call for the most expensive construction and it seems to me that there is some way of revising the plans so as to provide a suitable bridge which will be a credit to the state and the county and still come within the amount available."

"Naturally I am interested in the bridge because I introduced the bill in the legislature which made the bridge possible. For ten years before that time there had been a constant demand for the bridge and efforts had been made to have it built. Officials and delegations visited Albany repeatedly and the Hon. George Washburn, who was in the assembly, made every effort to get a bridge bill passed. When the bill finally became a law which made the bridge part of the state highway system, to be constructed at state expense, it appeared as if the crisis had been passed and the only thing to do after that was to proceed with plans and to procure bids.

"Within the past two weeks I had a long talk on the subject of the Sleighsborough bridge with John N. Carlisle, who was formerly state highway commissioner, and he expressed deep interest in the project which was to form so important a part of the state highway system. He was thoroughly familiar with all the details but expressed the belief that the plans on which bids were solicited called for too expensive a construction. His office had prepared plans during the time he was highway commissioner, and, of course, other plans have been prepared at other times.

"Knowing that estimates sometimes are less than the bids, the natural impulse of officials desirous of having the bridge built would be to prepare such plans and estimates as would allow the construction within the appropriation available. It would be nice to have a million dollar bridge, if such a thing were possible, but in that event should plans be prepared calling for a bridge that would cost a million and a half?

"The bridge seemed to me while I was in the legislature to be the main consideration, with road construction coming later to connect up the different sections of state and county highways already constructed or contemplated, and that is what the people want. They want the bridge first, and the roads will take care of themselves. But if the bridge is not built now, it never will be built, and the time to act is at once.

"The first thing to determine is what time we have in which to act. Then we can discuss what we can do, though whatever action is taken later must be prompt and there must be no delay. Everybody knows that all kinds of plans are revised so as to eliminate expensive frills and cut down the cost. It is done every day with highway and bridge plans all over the country; it has been done in Ulster county. If plans have been prepared and estimates made in the past which would permit a bridge to be constructed within the amount available, is there any reason why such revision of plans should call for more expensive construction, even considering the advanced cost of materials?"

Put Down the Cost.

District Attorney Frederick G. Trauer said: "Whether we want a bridge is such an elementary proposition that it needs no discussion. We want it. We have been working for years to secure it and matters have progressed to the stage of opening bids. To be deprived of the object of our efforts now and to be told that it is impossible to cut down the cost to a reasonable figure which will come within the amount available ought to be a matter susceptible of proof and such proof is what we require now. A certain amount has been set aside for a specific purpose and that purpose is the building of the bridge. Investigation ought to show promptly whether or not it is possible to revise the plans, or for that matter to prepare entirely new plans, if such a thing should be necessary, in order to build a bridge which will come within the amount of the appropriation. There must be competent engineers and bridge builders somewhere who can prepare plans which will meet the requirements and not exceed the available amount."

Regents a Week Later.

The annual regents' examination will be held in the public schools from June 14 to June 25. The schools will close on June 28, a week later than usual, owing to the fact that the examinations come later than customary.

George Dolson Seriously Ill.

George Dolson of Highland is seriously ill at his home on the New as the burden of taxation in Ulster county was so great that he did not believe it either wise or practicable to increase it. A fourth method was individual contributions from residents of the city and the county. This he regarded as chimerical. He expressed his disgust and regret over the delay, the cause of which he said was perfectly well understood, and was not Monday.

At the Hospital.

Ethel Griffin of No. 109 Hunter street was removed to the Kingston City Hospital in the ambulance on Monday.

Jennie Hatch's Secret

Only One Other Person Shared It

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

Jennie Hatch was a sea captain's daughter and lived in New Bedford in the whaling days when ships went off on long voyages for oil. Jennie grew up almost as good a sailor as her father. When she was ten years old she could handle a pair of oars as well as her strength would permit and when she was fourteen would be seen any time in the bay on which she lived sailing a little boat with a leg-mut-on sail, skimming the water like a bird. She didn't seem to mind it when the wind was quite fresh and the waves were rather large for so small a boat.

True, on one occasion she was captured by her main sheet getting caught in the tiller, but she clung to the boat till she was rescued and laughed at her rescuers as though she considered her ducking a good joke.

It was that cheery disposition and absence of fear which made her popular with her neighbors, who were all amphibious, and, as for the few young fellows who were not at sea, they were all in love with her, to say nothing of those who were at sea and came ashore for short periods. When she came to a marriageable age her father wished that his first mate, David Larraway, should get the prize. Possibly David might have won her had he passed more of his time ashore. But a man who is gone on a two or three years' voyage, as sailors were in those days, was not very well situated to make love to a girl ashore.

Besides, David was thirty when Jennie was seventeen, a matter of fact, steady as a rock and not at all demonstrative. Captain Hatch had been on the same ship with him for eight years and during that time had learned that he was as reliable in foul as fair weather. And that was the reason why he wished Jennie to be his wife.

Jennie at this time was of an age in which a girl has not yet let go of boys to care for the attentions of men.

One day when the captain and his first mate were on their way back from a three years' cruise Hatch intimated to Larraway that if he could win Jennie it would be a relief to her parents. They feared she might take up with some worthless fellow who would make her miserable. Dave confessed to the captain that he had loved Jennie ever since she was passing from girlhood to womanhood. He had intended to speak to her as a lover before they had sailed from New Bedford, but somehow he couldn't get out what he had to say. The captain laughed at him and told him to "heave the lead" when they returned.

But when they brought the ship into port and went ashore they found a great change in Jennie. She was not only three years older, but all that sprightliness that had made her so attractive had gone out of her. Something had happened during their absence. What was it? No one except herself seemed to know, and she told no one.

Soon after her father had gone to sea on this voyage from which he was returning a young sailor named Baker had come into port and remained there several weeks while his ship was unloading her cargo and loading for another voyage. He was a handsome chap, with a devil-may-care way about him that was especially attractive to young girls. But he was dissipated—at least during his stay ashore—and when he sailed left a number of unpaid accounts behind him, mostly for liquor.

Ned Baker paid some attention to Jennie Hatch. It was known that her mother had reproved her daughter for associating with him, but this was all. When his ship was about to sail he was carousing on shore with a number of his messmates, and the party were carried on board by an officer and a boat's crew that had been sent for the purpose. This was town talk after the sailing of the ship, and Jennie's friends considered that if she had had any serious intentions with regard to Baker it was well for her that he had shown in good time what he was.

As a consequence was not far from Larraway's attempting to win Jennie's hand. He did not attempt to do so, but he showed his great friendliness. This she accepted—indeed, seemed to need. Her father's ship—the Jennie Hatch, named for her—remained in port several months for repairs, and during this time Larraway saw a great deal of Jennie. No one seemed to consider their being together anything more than friendship, for they did not act like lovers. At any rate, Jennie's behavior toward Larraway seemed that of a woman toward an older brother.

After awhile Larraway took on a serious look as well as Jennie. He saw her less often and seemed to be distressed about something. When his ship sailed, before going aboard he went to Jennie's home to bid her goodbye, but no one except themselves knew what passed between them. On the voyage the captain wished to ask the mate some questions, but Larraway gave him no encouragement to do so.

When the men returned to New Bedford the friendly intercourse between Larraway and Jennie Hatch was renewed, and this time their friends began to think there was something in the nature of a courtship between them. But Larraway sailed again without there being any evidence of an engagement between him and Jennie, and there seemed to be no prospect of an engagement.

When the Jennie Hatch returned to port again her captain decided to give up the sea and settle down on shore. Larraway was made master of the vessel. Shortly before he sailed again it was announced that he and Jennie were to be married and she was to sail with him. Much disappointment was expressed that the wedding was private, no one but the bride's family being present. It was noticed that Jennie did not act like a woman who had married the man she loved. The gossip had it that young Baker had taken her heart with him when he sailed, though he was drunk at the time, and she had married Larraway to please her parents.

However, the pair, being at sea and consequently out of hearing of what was said about them, were not affected by it. The sailors around the Jennie Hatch considered their lovers, though there was a seriousness about the wife that was suspicious.

The Jennie Hatch had completed her work at sea and was returning when, after some very heavy weather, they came upon a wreck. That there were living persons aboard was evident from a distress signal. A boat was sent to the rescue and a crew of twelve men brought aboard the Jennie Hatch, after which the wreck was scuttled. The rescued crew were in fair condition, except one man, who had been knocked down by a sea that had come aboard and received an injury on the head.

When the men from the wreck were coming aboard Captain Larraway and his wife stood on the quarterdeck looking down upon them. Suddenly Jennie clutched her husband's arm. He turned and saw her eyes fixed on the injured man, who was being hoisted aboard. Her face was livid.

"What is it?" asked the husband anxiously.

"Come below with me and I'll tell you."

Larraway banded his wife down the companionway, and they disappeared in their cabin.

"It is he," said Jennie as soon as they were alone.

"Baker?"

"Yes."

During Baker's stay in port several years before he had persuaded the girl who had fallen in love with him to a clandestine marriage. When instead of bidding his bride goodbye before sailing he had chosen a sailor's spree ashore a great revulsion had sprung up within her. When Larraway returned she needed some friend to sympathize with her, and when he asked her to marry him she revealed his secret.

During Larraway's last voyage with Captain Hatch, Jennie in looking over the shipping news in a newspaper had seen among the death notices the name of Edwin R. Baker. He had been killed at Valparaiso in a fight between a party of liberty men ashore and some citizens. Although the name was slightly different, Jennie believed that her husband of a few days was dead. On Larraway's return from his voyage she had told him of her supposed freedom, and Larraway persuaded her to take her widowhood for granted and marry him.

And now the man had turned up to mar the happiness of a loving couple, and aboard the same ship!

When Jennie had caught sight of the face of the man who was being carried on board he was looking directly at her. What surprised her was that he showed no recognition. She hoped that he would not remember her while they were cooped up in the same ship. For a time she preferred to keep to her cabin, where she would not meet him. But, curious to know if he had forgotten her and fearing that the sailors would blame her, the only woman aboard, for not visiting an injured man, she asked her husband to take her to see him.

When Baker looked at her he showed no sign of remembrance of her. It occurred to her that the blow on the head he had received had occasioned a loss of memory. She asked him some questions that confirmed the suspicion. The man did not remember his own name.

Larraway and his wife looked at each other meaningly and withdrew to their cabin. The secret that they alone knew was still theirs and would remain so until Baker recovered his memory.

The man who was the legal husband of Jennie and the man who was her husband in all except a legal sense remained aboard the same ship till she reached port. Then Captain Larraway settled upon the injured man enough to keep him from want, but left his future in the hands of his comrades. What they did to discover who he was Larraway never knew, for he never asked. Once a month a certain bank paid on Larraway's account a sum to the person charged with Baker's care. All that Larraway or his wife knew of what became of him was that several years after this unfortunate meeting Larraway was notified by the bank through which the payments were made that no more funds were required—the man was dead.

Before the Jennie Hatch had picked up the shipwrecked crew Mrs. Hatch had given birth to a boy, and it was this serious fact that influenced Larraway and Jennie to keep their secret and make no change in their relations.

MASKED TUAREGS

Ruthless Buccaneers of the Middle Sahara Desert.

AT WAR WITH ALL MANKIND.

These Nomads of the Trackless Sands of Northern Africa Levy Tribute Upon All Caravans They Meet and Live in Mystery and Exclusiveness.

"In northern Africa there lies a trackless country, inhabited by a people, the masked Tuaregs, fascinating for the mystery and exclusiveness with which they have surrounded their life. These people, natives and rulers of the middle desert, are the allies of no one, but wage a futile guerrilla warfare with all who invade the inhospitable Sahara sands of their domain. They are the buccannery of the trackless sand, forever at war with all civilization and its restraints," says an article issued by the National Geographic society at Washington, which describes the people always willing to fight for the maintenance of their power to levy tribute upon the ancient trans-Saharan caravan routes.

"Masked Tuaregs are Berber nomads, a white desert people, whose country is probably the most inaccessible on earth. Even before Egyptian civilization began to leave coherent records of its history the Tuaregs, or Berbers, were long established along northern Africa. The great Arab invasion of the eleventh century displaced them from their possessions upon the seacoast and drove them into the savage area of the interior desert, where, with their hands raised against all who came into their pathless country, they have maintained themselves through the intervening centuries despite lack of water, sandstorms and lack of farming land, requisitioning by force of arms from the Arabs and Egyptians, to the north and east, and from the blacks of the Sudan, in the south, such necessities and luxuries as their cheerless portion of Mother Earth cannot supply them.

"There are five main tribes in the Tuareg confederation, and they inhabit the desert from Timbuktu and from Fezzan to Zinder. Their homes are reared in the heart of arid wastes, where vast solitudes, unnatural heats and unmarked distances shroud everything in uncanny mystery. They are masters of an area half that of the United States in extent. Of this 1,500,000 square miles of territory scarcely 3,000 acres, or less than the area of New York city, is cultivated land. This scanty farm land is only maintained by an enduring struggle with the drifting sands. These fierce adventurers who have forced the great desolation to yield them a support number 300,000 or more, according to estimate, and they have made themselves feared by the natives from the Mediterranean to the Jungles of central Africa.

"The Tuaregs wear the end of their turban cloth drawn around the face, allowing nothing but the eyes to be seen. It is worn for the purpose of protecting the throat and lungs from the cutting blasts of fine desert sand and also probably as an element enhancing the mystery of their life, for they seldom or never remove these masks, whether roving over the desert or visiting in the cities on the coast. Due to these cloths they are called masked Tuaregs, while the Arabs call them 'people of the veil.' The masks are dark blue and white, the former being worn by Tuareg nobles and the latter by the serfs and slaves.

"Some centers for trade, Tuareg towns, are situated in the middle desert. These are Wargla, Timbuktu, Ghat, Ghadames, Murzuk and Insalah. However, the Tuaregs have little care for trade and industry. He is a fearless, enduring, hard fighting adventurer or along the merchandise trails that cross the desert. Two important trails leave Tripoli, on the coast, and traverse 3,000 miles of sands and barren wastes to the Sudan, where rich cargoes of skins, gold, ivory and other interior African products are loaded upon camels and brought northward. Sometimes a single caravan consists of thousands of camels and merchandise to the value of hundreds of thousands of dollars. When passing through the Tuareg country the leaders of such caravans have had to pay a tribute to the chieftains by the way for safe escort or run the risk of losing all their goods.

"From Morocco to Tripoli the relentless ferocity, the cunning and the daring of the Tuaregs are mingled in all the traditions unpleasant to the more peaceful natives along the coast. The Tuaregs meanwhile openly spy upon the caravans in course of outfitting in the coast cities and thrive upon the tribute they are able to exact.

"The Tuaregs are of the purest Berber stock, the noble families unmingled with other blood, and in their own language they call themselves the noble people. Nominally they are Mohammedans, and some of their number compose the most intolerant and warlike sect in Islam, the Senussite sect. Their hatred for the foreigners is greater even than that bred by their religion, and so they are more exclusive than even were the Chinese or Japanese. Their social organization divides them into five classes—the nobles, the priests, the serfs, the expert horse and the slaves. All of these classes have this that is democratic—they form together the Tuareg family, which holds itself superior to all the other peoples of the earth."

DIFFERENT SIZES AND SHAPES OF EGGS

Too Small—Ideal Shape—Too Long.

Much has been said about high records made by hens in the egg-laying contests as well as records made by hens in the yards of poultry breeders. The number of eggs produced is not all that should be considered, for an egg to be of value should be of good size and shape, and be covered with a sound, smooth shell.

It is indeed very fortunate for the poultry industry that hens' eggs are all so near the same size. The eggs of the different breeds in the national egg laying contest at Mountain Grove, Mo., varied in weight from 2.03 ounces to 2.29 ounces, while the hens themselves averaged in weight from 3.12 to 3.36 pounds, and strange as it may seem, the hens whose eggs averaged 2.03 ounces averaged 5.75 pounds, while the ones whose eggs averaged 2.29 ounces averaged only 3.40 pounds each. In fact, the size of the hen has little or no influence on the size of an egg. A four-pound hen will lay an egg the same size as an eight-pound hen.

The size and shape of an egg is a point all breeders can work for, as it is the only thing in common with all varieties. In poultry shows, the breeders of the various breeds and varieties can not enter a free-for-all competition on size of birds, shape, color, comb, earlobes, shanks, etc., for they are not the same with different breeds, but the size and shape of all eggs should be the same. An ideal egg should be an oblong oval, slightly tapering from one end to the other and should weigh two and one-sixth ounces, or 34 ounces to the dozen. Eggs of this size and shape are the correct size to fill the standard egg case filler, and, if incubated, will give better results than where various sizes and shapes are incubated together.

The old idea that round eggs hatch pullets and the long eggs hatch cockerels is incorrect, for a hen lays uniformly shaped eggs regularly which hatch approximately an equal number of cockerels and pullets. Nothing can be told from the size and shape of an egg whether it is fertile or infertile, or whether it would hatch a cockerel or a pullet, but the shape of an egg is a characteristic which is transmitted to the offspring. Therefore, use as breeders only the hens which produce eggs of correct size and shape.

CARE AND FEED FOR CHICKS

Youngsters Are Better Off Without Food for First Forty-Eight Hours—Keep Them Warm.

(By H. L. KEMPSTER, University of Missouri, College of Agriculture.)

Studies at the Missouri agricultural experiment station warrant the following recommendations in regard to the care and feeding of young chicks:

During the first two days of the chick's life it should rest and be kept warm. It is better without having food until it is forty-eight hours old. Then the following mixture should be fed in dry litter and also in a shallow tray: three parts finely cracked wheat, three parts finely cracked corn, one part steel cut oats. Keep some of this in the litter at the time.

Chicks should have access to a clean drinking fountain which should be so constructed that they cannot get themselves wet. It is also desirable to give them access to sour skim milk or buttermilk. Twice daily the chicks should receive rolled oats or the following mixture: three parts bread crumbs, three parts corn bread, one part boiled egg. This mixture may be fed dry or it may be moistened with sour milk. A very small amount of charcoal and finely cut green food should also be fed.

Continue the mixture of wheat, corn and oats until the chicks are four weeks old, changing gradually from the finer to more coarsely ground feed. Keep the following mixture in a box where chicks may run to it at all times: 30 parts wheat bran, 30 parts corn meal, 30 parts wheat middlings, ten parts beef scrap, sifted fine, and one part bone meal.

Keep fine charcoal and grit where chicks may have free access to it. Feed four times daily. Continue the green feed and give the chicks milk. It may be advisable to feed a wet mash once a day at 4:00 p. m. Feed only what the chicks will eat up clean before going to roost. Change gradually from chick food to cracked corn and wheat. Chicks that are not yarded should be fed corn and wheat in litter as a scratch food and should also have access to a dry mash in a hopper where they can help themselves.

Raise chickens with the simplest rations possible. Clean food, consisting of cracked and ground grain; animal food, such as sour milk, butter, fruit, vegetables, etc., will provide a living on most any farm if attention is given to them. And the living is the most important and the most expensive item in the farmer's account. Why not study how to make a living with little things and leave the larger things for cash income?

MAKE PROFIT WITH POULTRY

Turkeys, Geese, Ducks and Guinea Could Be Raised as Well as Chickens on Average Farm.

There is room enough, feed enough and time enough on most farms to raise several different kinds of fowls. Not only could a large flock of purebred chickens be kept, but turkeys, geese, ducks and guineas could also be raised.

Where one lives within reach of a city or good shipping facilities it would not be a very difficult matter to make several hundred dollars a year in clear profits from the fowls on the farm.

Much depends upon the interest taken and the facilities for raising the birds and marketing the products.

POULTRY PRODUCTS BY MAIL

Carcases Must Be Wrapped in Oiled Paper and Marked Perishable—Be Careful With Eggs.

Poultry which is to be shipped by mail must be marked perishable. The carcasses must be suitably wrapped in oiled paper, then in heavy corrugated pasteboard, then an outside wrapper of good, strong paper, or enclosed in boxes so constructed as to protect the other parcels.

Eggs in parcels weighing more than twenty pounds will be accepted for local delivery when so packed as to prevent damage to other mail.

RIGHT START WITH POULTRY

Don't Begin With the Idea of Getting Large Profits Out of Fancy Breeds and Showing.

No one should start into the growing of poultry on a large scale with the idea of getting much out of fancy breeding and showing.

Better start with the production of a fine line of table eggs and dressed poultry and in the course of years branch out into the fancy business. It takes much more knowledge and experience to handle the fancy side than it does the practical side.

TO SEND SUGGESTIONS.

Members of Independence Union to Telegram President Wilson.

At a meeting of the Kingston Branch of the American Independence Union held Monday evening it was recommended that individuals send telegrams to Washington suggesting that no action be taken that would prove dangerous to the peace of the nation. On motion of the Rev. A. Schmidt resolutions of regret were adopted on the departure of the Rev. Howard E. Snyder.

Life and Character Reading

APRIL 25

Your horoscope shows that you possess great power of concentration. You are generous to a fault. You have a broad, sympathetic nature. Your governing sign is Taurus, one of the most difficult signs to be born under, as it gives such extremes of character traits. Only absolute control of your physical senses will bring you success, yet with this accomplished you would become a giant of intellect and physical strength in the world.

The secret of success in every undertaking in the business world is concentration of all energy, thought and effort upon one aim.

Study of conditions of favorable time and place to make your effort effective is one means toward results.

Your home relations are benevolently governed today by Venus, which has come into conjunction with the sun on this date.

Want Ads relating to renting houses, rooms and apartments are well favored.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL

By Telegram to The Freeman.

New York, April 25.—There was a brisk demand for stocks at the opening today and the market was strong. The accumulation of the Marling issues by new interests made the preferred the most prominent factor of the early dealings. The initial sales were 3,000 shares at 82 1/2 to 83, against 80 1/2 at the close yesterday. The common moved up 1/2 to 24, both stocks selling at new high records for the year. Steel common started 1/2 higher at 83 1/2, and many specialties made gains ranging from 1 to 3 points. Industrial Alcohol opened 2 1/2 points higher at 144 1/2, but reacted to 143 1/2 in the next few minutes. The copper stocks as a group were active and strong with Anaconda moving up 1 1/2 and Utah a point to 80 1/2. The Mexican stocks advanced sharply, American Smelting rising 1 1/2 to 93 and Mexican Petroleum 1 1/2 to 95 1/2. The railway stocks generally showed fractional gains. Westinghouse advanced 1/2 to 57. Vigorous advances were noted throughout the list in the late forenoon with the specialties showing the greatest gains. There was persistent accumulation of the standard issues, Steel common rising to 84 and Anaconda to 83 1/2. Industrial Alcohol jumped to 145; Mexican Petroleum to 97 1/2; Greene Cananea to 47; American Smelting to 94 1/2; American Can to 55; Railway Steel Spring to 36 1/2, and gains of three to five points were made in American Zinc, Baldwin, Crucible, Lackawanna Steel, New York Air Brake and Studebaker. Bethlehem Steel jumped ten points to 435. Money loaning at 2 1/2 per cent.

In the late afternoon there were some recessions, which were followed by quiet rallies. Marine preferred declined to 80 1/2, rallied to above 82, and the common advanced after selling at 23 1/2 rallied to its previous high of 25. Similar advances after recessions were noted in Steel common, Industrial Alcohol and Mexican Petroleum. Distillers Securities was exceptionally strong, advancing to 49 1/2, a gain in all of more than 5 points.

The market closed firm. Strength was shown in many issues in the last hour, when Marine preferred sold above 84 and the common scored a new high record of 25 1/2. Sharp upturns were made in a number of specialties. Just before the close, however, there were recessions, Baldwin Locomotive and New Haven being exceptionally weak. Irregularity prevailed in the final dealings due to a disposition to restrict speculation until after the result of the steel meeting was announced. Governments unchanged; other bonds strong.

"Too much Johnson" was staged for the benefit of the Yanks for the third time this season.

And speaking of triplets—Covaleskie won his third game for the Tigers over the White Sox. He seems to have changed his non de plume from the Giant Killer to the "Spotless Hosiery Killer."

With 16 men facing the firing line the Cardinals staged a belated rally and downed the Reds.

The Athletics couldn't stand prosperity. But any other team would have shared the same fate had they opposed "Dutch" Leonard.

The fans in New York, Boston and Chicago didn't see the home team win—neither did they see it lose.

FIELD OF SPORTS.

Notes of Baseball, Fugilism and Other Lines of Athletics

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Liverpool, April 25.—Jimmy Wilde, the English flyweight champion, today still holds his title. He met Johnny Rossner of New York last night and forced the seconds of the latter to throw up the sponge in the eleventh round.

Kansas City, Mo., April 25.—Jack Dillon, the Indianapolis cave man, and Bat Levinsky of New York are in trim for their 15 round decision bout here tonight. Dillon is favorite in the betting.

Milwaukee, Wis., April 25.—Fred die Welch can thank the author of Wisconsin law today that the light-weight crown still nestles among his brown curls. Had there been a decision in his ten-round bout with Ever Hammer here last night the young Chicagoan would have been the new champ. Hammer had eight of the ten rounds. After the fight Welch claimed to have broken his hand, but the club physician who examined it said it was merely a bad bruise.

New Orleans, April 25.—The fistic world had a new welterweight champ today. Jack Britton of Chicago outpointed and outfought Ted Lewis, the Englishman, in 20 rounds last night. Britton astonished the 40,000 fans by his amazing speed. Time and again he forced the Britisher to swing wildly while he danced out of harm's way. Lewis left the ring badly marked while Britton was comparatively unblemished.

WHITFIELD.

Whitfield, April 25.—Mrs. John Enderly who has been ill for the past week, is improving under the care of Dr. Pearl of Accord.

Calvin Davis spent Easter with his lady friend at The Vly.

Walker Wager has purchased an automobile.

Virgil Chambers and family spent Easter with relatives at Krumville.

Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Lockwood of Kysenike spent Easter with Mr. and Mrs. E. Van Vleet.

Mr. and Mrs. Simon Hornbeck and family spent Saturday in Kingston.

Mr. and Mrs. Herman Gazley of Accord spent Sunday with Mrs. Gazley's parents at Lyonsville.

Miss Louise Hill spent Saturday night and Sunday with relatives in Kingston.

Townsend Osterhoudt and two children of Accord spent Easter with relatives at Rose Hill.

Mrs. George Stokes and children were guests last Wednesday at the home of her mother at Mettacaubonts.

A. G. Davis was in Kerhonkson last Thursday.

James Enderly's new house is progressing nicely.

MENKE'S DAILY SPORTING LETTER

(By Frank G. Menke.)

New York, April 25.—It would seem that the wisest course for Frank Gotch to pursue is to remain in retirement as far as a wrestling match with Joe Stecher is concerned.

Gotch is 35 years old, far behind his wrestling prime, and "rusty" because of years of meat idleness. Stecher is 22, in the full bloom of his young manhood, and practically at the crest of his meteoric career. It is doubtful if Gotch, in the days of his greatest prowess was as wonderful a wrestler as Stecher is today.

By remaining in retirement, Gotch retains during all the rest of his days the glory that belongs to an undefeated champion; to an athlete who met—and beat—the strongest foes pitted against him before age came on. Coming out and trying conclusions, he probably will do a Jim Jeffries.

Gotch Isn't After Coin.

No one justly would accuse Gotch of displaying a white feather by refusing to meet Stecher now. His alibi is good. He's beyond his prime and out of wrestling condition.

Yes, Gotch would gain $25,000 or so by grappling with Stecher. But Gotch isn't money mad; $25,000 doesn't mean much to him now.

His worth upwards of $250,000. What is $25,000 to him compared with the probable loss of his priceless treasure—the championship?

If the Gotch of today were the Gotch of five or eight years ago, then a mat bout with Stecher would be worth going a thousand miles to see. It would be the grapple of the century.

But, alas, Gotch is 35—and Stecher is 22. Stecher is coming—and Gotch went long ago.

What's the answer?

As to Fred Welsh.

Freddie Welsh announces that he will retire as champion on July 7, 1917. Welsh may do it—and he may not. It all depends upon whether or not he tries conclusions over the decision route with any one of the topnotch lightweights in the game today.

The day that Welsh willingly risks his title in a long bout will be the day that he will retire as champion. He has gone back so far during the past two years that any one of the three leading lightweights—Benny Leonard, Johnny Dundee and Charlie White—can beat him decisively in 20 rounds.

The chances of Welsh being knocked out in a no-decision bout are, we declared more than a year ago, almost nil. The Welshman has a perfect defense for his chin, and a body that can stand up pretty well under a fusillade of blows. If Leonard, White or Dundee hit Welsh flush up on the chin, the fight will be over. But that is not easy of accomplishment. Welsh always fights with his chin on his breast and with his guard covering the other vulnerable spots on his upper works.

And that's why Welsh has been able to pick up lots of soft money during the past year or so, by mingling in scores of short bouts, without being knocked out.

Even a King can't dictate what you should like or not like

If it so happened that Fatimas were originally "Made and blended for the King of Whatiz"—would that fact prove that you were going to like Fatimas best?

It would not.

A man's taste is his own. A cigarette that might delight some old potentate's palate would not necessarily please you.

That's why we leave Fatimas up to your taste.

But there is something more than good taste that is mighty important to you.

No matter how good-tasting a cigarette may be—it can only be the SENSIBLE cigarette for you if it is comfortable, too.

Its pure tobacco must be cool and comfortable to your throat at all times. And it must leave you feeling fine and fit at the end of a hard-smoking day.

Will it do all that?

Then, it is the sensible cigarette for YOU.

There are thousands and thousands of men who believe that Fatima is the most sensible cigarette there is.

Try them yourself. You may discover—as these thousands of other men have—that Fatima have just the cool, mellow taste that you've been longing for in a cigarette.

You may find that Fatimas have the kind of mildness which allows you to smoke more of them than you might of other cigarettes.

You may find that Fatimas offer you a little more satisfaction in every puff than you ever before found in any other cigarette.

FATIMA THE TURKISH BLEND A Sensible Cigarette

Your Opportunity

Yes, Mr. Chauffeur, this month of April is the month of your opportunity, for right now hundreds of auto owners are hiring chauffeurs for the touring season which is just about opening.

Auto owners want men who will take good care of their cars and who are careful, experienced drivers. If you are such an one, tell the auto owner all about yourself and that you want to drive for him this season and give him this information through a little Freeman Want Ad this April.
